

Generating Ideas for Research

To begin our brainstorming process for project study this year, consult the following links (or any other reputable source you'd like to use) and find an article/idea that you believe fits the following guidelines:

1. I can verify that this topic is scientific in nature and could potentially lend itself to a small scale investigation with a measurable and observable outcome.
2. I'm truly interested in this topic.
3. I could feasibly work with a team to design and actually carry out some sort of an experiment based on it.
 - a. Feasibility includes things like safety, cost, and scope (doable in 6 months)

<http://www.sciencenews.org/>

<http://www.sciencedaily.com/>

http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/science_and_environment/

Come to class on the assigned day ready your idea with the class and smaller groups of your peers. You will submit this article to turnitin.com as proof of your participation. This will possibly be the basis for the work you do for the next 6 months, so give some time and thought to this endeavor.

Generating Ideas for Research

To begin our brainstorming process for project study this year, consult the following links (or any other reputable source you'd like to use) and find an article/idea that you believe fits the following guidelines:

1. I can verify that this topic is scientific in nature and could potentially lend itself to a small scale investigation with a measurable and observable outcome.
2. I'm truly interested in this topic.
3. I could feasibly work with a team to design and actually carry out some sort of an experiment based on it.
 - a. Feasibility includes things like safety, cost, and scope (doable in 6 months)

<http://www.sciencenews.org/>

<http://www.sciencedaily.com/>

http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/science_and_environment/

Come to class on the assigned day ready your idea with the class and smaller groups of your peers. You will submit this article to turnitin.com as proof of your participation. This will possibly be the basis for the work you do for the next 6 months, so give some time and thought to this endeavor.